This document consists of 13 printed pages and 3 blank pages.

Answer all four questions

- 1 Allocation of resources in an economy may be dominated by either the private or public sector. Scarcity of resources compels countries to sacrifice the production of certain products and this can be illustrated using a Production Possibility Curve (PPC). The quantity supplied of various products in an economy is influenced by the product's elasticity of supply.

(a) (i) State one example of a business organisation in the private sector.

..... [1]

(ii) State two factors of production.

.....

(b) Explain two causes of an outward shift of a PPC.

- 3 There are a variety of indicators that can be used to assess the living standards in a country, for example, real Gross Domestic Product per head. The economic cycle can indicate an increase in economic growth which would improve living standards, increase government tax revenue and reduce unemployment. Besides private individuals' participation in an economic activity, the government also operates state-owned enterprises called public corporations which are beneficial to an economy.

(a) (i) Explain what is meant by living standards.

- 4 Agreements such as the Southern African Customs Union (SACU) have been formed to encourage free trade. Despite the existence of such agreements, some governments still use trade protectionist measures to protect domestic industries. Therefore, such decisions can have varying impacts on poverty levels and economic performance depending on the country's priorities and development goals.

- (a) (i) State the type of poverty where two groups of people in a society are compared to determine their state of poverty.

..... [1]

- (ii) Explain what is meant by absolute advantage in international trade.
